"Hewz" Ketchup Bottle Labels for the Neilsen Vanishing Ketchup Bottle.

First, I believe the Neilsen Vanishing Bottle line (http://www.nnmagic.com/magicitems/vanishingbottlespage.htm) is a classic in magic. They look very good and are very sturdy and should last a lifetime with appropriate care. The Neilsen Ketchup bottle is wonderful, except its new label is not as believable as the rest of the line. These labels fix that issue.

They are not "Heinz", but 'Hewz', they do not say "57 Varieties" but "67 Varieties", and they do not have the Heinz Pickle", but a "Hewz Deflated Balloon". All that being said, they do look remarkably similar, and I would not expect an audience member to notice the difference. Of course, a close examination will show it is not a copy or the real thing, but you won't be letting people examine them anyway, for obvious reasons.

These graphics are vector graphics, which means they print crisp and can be resized. I don't know why you would resize it since it is sized perfectly for the Neilsen bottle - but you can.

I recommend you either print these on white static cling print media you can buy in sheets here on http://eBay.com or have http://GotPrint.com print you up a batch pretty cheap.

You can also print these on regular paper and affix them with rubber cement. I do not know the long term effect of rubber cement on the rubber of the Neilsen bottle.

Of course, you can use Neilsen's labels too, but their ketchup labels are very generic looking.

This is what you get:

1 PDF so you can print the labels on your home printer (4 up - 8.5×11 in) - with directions.

1 Illustrator native document you can send to GotPrint (12 up - 12×18 in) with PDF directions. As of Nov. 2012 they should charge less than $20 including shipping and handling within CONUS

Please remember to use this product, you are REQUIRED to leave a review here:

and preferably to review it in any magic forums too.

Thank You!
